The International Sociology of Sport Association
2018 Annual Conference

June 5-8, Lausanne, Switzerland
Conference Theme:
Sports Organizations and Organizing Sports: Critical Reflections

Just a quick reminder that from June 5 to 8, 2018, the International Sociology of Sport Association (ISSA) will hold its World Congress at the University of Lausanne, Switzerland. The conference theme is Sports Organizations and Organizing Sports: Critical Reflections

Lausanne, the Olympic capital, is home to the headquarters of no less than 46 international sports federations, and therefore provides the opportunity to foster connections and debate between the scholarly community and the (inter)national sports community.
The aim of the main theme of this annual conference will be to tackle the links between the social sciences, especially sociology, and sports organizations.

We will address how the social sciences and sports organizations influence each other. This will be achieved by exploring two main aspects of this relationship. On the one hand, we aim to consider how research is integrated into sports organizations and what its influence is on factors such as gender, ageing, social class and power relations, violence, risk and globalization. This will involve key areas of interest, such as the contribution of the social sciences and their ability to transform sports organizations, its actors, policies, representations and values, as well as the role and added value of social scientists in sport organizations, as well as interrogating policy coherence within the sport sector as a cross-cutting theme. On the other hand, we will also examine how sports organizations impact the social sciences. For example, which theoretical and methodological issues are raised by the way sports organizations function, and how can the study of sports organizations help to further extend wider sociological knowledge?

Beyond this main theme, the congress will also feature a diverse range of sessions to enable scholars, including postgraduate students, the opportunity to share their latest research. The congress will provide networking opportunities in order to allow delegates to develop collaborative research projects and extend international scientific knowledge in the sociology of sport.

Over 240 delegates have registered so far. For more information on the congress program, accommodation, travel and local information please visit www.ISSA2018.org

SPORT AND DISCRIMINATION CONFERENCE

CALL FOR PAPERS

Oxford Brookes University, Tuesday 4th September 2018

The third Sport and Discrimination Conference explores the interdisciplinary and intersectional nature of discrimination within the sporting world. This one-day conference at Oxford Brookes University aims to investigate different forms of discrimination (racial, gender, sexuality, disability, class, etc.), across a range of sports, drawing on work from a variety of academic fields (including sociology, sports studies, psychology, politics, history, and media and cultural studies).

What is the nature and extent of discrimination in sport today? How does it affect people’s experience of sport and their wider lives? What are the barriers to change? And how can discrimination best be tackled in the future? These are some of the issues, which we hope to explore.

This conference welcomes and encourages proposals from academics, postgraduates and policy makers, who wish to present papers making empirical, theoretical or personal contributions. Because we are in a Football World Cup year, we particularly welcome proposals from those exploring the tournament in Russia. And, as class is often marginalised in discourses around sport and discrimination, we would encourage proposals, which critically explore this. Proposals may approach the conference theme from a variety of perspectives, including:

- Empirical findings about the nature and extent of discrimination in sport;
- Research articulating the experiences of those who have suffered discrimination in sport;
- Research which attempts to understand the intersectional nature of discrimination within sport; Contributions adding to the theoretical understanding of sport and discrimination;
- Policy recommendations for tackling and reducing discrimination in sport.

Proposals, for 20-minute presentations, should include title, abstract (250 words), the name and institutional affiliation of the presenter and a concise biography (100 words). The submission deadline is Friday 8 June 2018. All submissions and enquiries should be sent to: SportDisc@leedsbeckett.ac.uk

The conference attendance fee is £75 for academics and £50 for postgraduates. The registration page and link will be circulated following your notification of acceptance (if accepted) on 22 June.

Key dates:

We are particularly interested in highlighting work that addresses intersections with race/ethnicity and sexuality, and that identifies possible implications, impacts and potential solutions to problems.

Keynotes will be presented April 20 and April 21 by:

- Claire Smith: first woman Major League Baseball beat writer, winner of the J. G. Taylor Spink Award, and first woman voted into the sportswriters’ wing of the Baseball Hall of Fame.

Special Journal Issue Call for Papers

Managing Abuse and Integrity in Sport

Special Issue: Sport Management Review Call for Papers

Emma Kavanagh¹, Adi Adams¹, Jamie Cleland², Carly Stewart¹, & Daniel Lock¹
¹Bournemouth University, Department of Sport & Physical Activity, Poole, UK
²University of South Australia, School of Management, Adelaide, Australia.

Sport and physical activity (sport from hereon) can provide an environment within which the exploitation of power and authority may lead to the abuse of individuals. Such issues have implications for managers across the sporting spectrum from grassroots to elite levels. Consequently, there is a need for scholars to pay greater attention to the structures, policies, processes, practices, and sites in which abuse occurs in order to better manage the integrity of sport; the well-being of participants, coaches, and officials; and the protection of other stakeholders affected by abuse in its various forms.

There is a growing body of literature exploring what might be termed the ‘dark side of sport’. To date, authors in this field have conceptualized and investigated the types and effects of abuse experienced by individuals, for example: sexual, emotional, physical, harassment, discrimination, bullying and other forms of non-accidental violence. The developing academic study of abuse in sport has been coupled with serious issues that have emerged in relation to the welfare and safety of individuals through the publication of independent reviews and media reportage of cultures of fear, intimidation, and bullying.
The harm caused by abuse represents a significant blind spot for practitioners and an area for development in sport management research.

Managing abuse in both physical and virtual sporting spaces, and promoting integrity in sport to offer safe, fair and inclusive environments for all are crucial concerns in contemporary sports, physical activity, and health industries. Attention must now turn toward (a) increasing theoretical and conceptual understanding of abuse so that (b) we can develop evidence-based practical implications so that sport managers might negotiate and challenge abuse throughout the levels of sport.

The micro-interpersonal and macro-institutional contexts of abuse are broad and in many cases under-researched. To move this debate forward, the purpose of this special issue of Sport Management Review is to promote thought, understanding, and action to enhance knowledge and practice on the management of abuse in sport. Specifically, we encourage submissions from scholars both inside and outside of the sport management domain (e.g., sociology, social psychology, coaching and pedagogy, psychology, sociocultural studies, criminology) to provoke a broad, interdisciplinary, and critical discussion about the management of abuse. Possible topics include (but are not limited to):

- Understanding identities, spaces, and places in relation to the management of abuse or non-accidental violence
- Government and policy impacts for managing abuse
- Implementation of legislation surrounding safeguarding, protection, and integrity
- Case management and handling at both an interpersonal and/or organisational level
- Whistleblowing and the reporting of abuse
- Policing and regulating safe sporting spaces
- Intervention and education of safeguarding and integrity in and through sport
- Monitoring and evaluating safeguarding policy and praxis across contexts
- Management roles and responsibilities in promoting integrity in sport
- Facilitating programmes of empowerment
- How abuse can have an impact upon participation

Submission Process
Submissions are due on or before September 28, 2018 via the SMR online submission system at https://www.evise.com/profile/#/SMR/login. To ensure that all manuscripts are correctly identified for review in relation to the special issue it is important that authors select “SI: Managing Abuse” when they reach the “article type” step in the submission process. All submissions must adhere to the Sport Management Review ‘Guide for authors’ available at: https://www.elsevier.com/journals/sport-management-review/1441-3523/guide-for-authors.

We anticipate publication in Issue 1, Volume 23 (February 2020). For further information about this special issue call, please contact Emma Kavanagh at ekavangh@bournemouth.ac.uk

Film of Note: Forever Pure (2016)
Produced by Maya Zinshtein, Geoff Arbourne

Beitar Jerusalem F.C. is the most popular and controversial football team in Israel, the only club in the Premier League never to sign an Arab player. Midway through the 2012-13 season, a secretive transfer deal by the owner, Russian-Israeli oligarch Arcadi Gaydamak, brought two Muslim players from Chechnya. The deal inspired the most racist campaign in Israeli sport that sent the club spiralling out of control. One season in a life of this famed club is a story of Israeli society, personal identity, politics, money and a window into how racism is destroying a team and society from within.

The film was positively reviewed by the Guardian:

No Slam Dunk
Gender, Sport and the Unevenness of Social Change

Critical Issues in Sport and Society

In just a few decades, sport has undergone a radical gender transformation. However, Cheryl Cooky and Michael A. Messner suggest that the progress toward gender equity in sports is far from complete. The continuing barriers to full and equal participation for young people, the far lower pay for most elite-level women athletes, and the continuing dearth of fair and equal media coverage all underline how much still has yet to change before we see gender equality in sports.

The chapters in No Slam Dunk show that this is not simply a story of an “unfinished revolution.” Rather, they contend, it is simplistic optimism to assume that we are currently nearing the conclusion of a story of linear progress that ends with a certain future of equality and justice. This book provides important theoretical and empirical insights into the contemporary world of sports to help explain the unevenness of social change and how, despite significant progress, gender equality in sports has been “No Slam Dunk.”

CHERYL COOKY is an associate professor of American Studies in the School of Interdisciplinary Studies at Purdue University in West Lafayette, Indiana.

MICHAEL A. MESSNER is a professor of sociology and gender studies at the University of Southern California in Los Angeles. He is the author or editor of many books including Child’s Play: Sport in Kids’ Worlds (Rutgers University Press).
