The relationship between sport and health is complex and paradoxical. Sport is associated with many direct and indirect health benefits to individuals, communities, and societies. Yet, it is also associated with powerful ideological values that lead to health-risking behaviour, including violent behaviour on and off the field of play. This session will explore issues such as violence between players, sexual harassment and abuse, the use of performance-enhancing practices, the so-called “holy trinity” of sport, hegemonic masculinity and alcohol, and the role of medical professionals in sport. Furthermore, papers are invited considering the role of sport development, and sport for development and peace, practitioners, in addressing issues of health and violence in sports.
Sport, Politics & Policy

Mike Sam

Sport is integrated across all sectors of society (public, private and voluntary) and it is often characterised by a messy co-mingling of the three. Changes in policy (or the introduction of new policies) invariably entail an attempt to change the structure or balance of real power within/between organisations. Analysing the politics around these processes is worthy of attention because they not only reflect citizen demands - they shape expectations as well, giving issues like 'obesity', or 'medal counts' legitimacy in the public domain. This session welcomes papers having a focus on politics and policy as they relate to matters of the state (both local and federal), supra-national institutions and sport governing bodies.

Globalization & Sport

Mike Sam

Modern sport is intricately linked to globalization. While globalization has enabled sport’s transformation into a transnational phenomenon, such changes have been founded on variable regional/local responses; passive, purposeful and resistant. This session has a broad thematic focus on social issues relating to sport and globalization, including aspects of power, violence and justice. It also welcomes papers from diverse theoretical backgrounds addressing transformations in the technologies, politics, cultures and social networks surrounding sport.

Power & Justice in Sport

Mary McDonald

This session seeks papers that deal with the ways in which power and justice are exercised and/or resisted through sport. Possible topics include but are not limited to: theoretical discussions of sport, justice and/or power; policies that seek justice and fairness in sport; activisms, social movements and sport; discourses of race, gender, class and/or sexuality as remade and or challenged through sporting practices.

Media & Sport

Brent McDonald

The relationship between the mass media and sport has a long and rich history as a topic of sociological inquiry. However the rapid proliferation of new media, and the continued concentrated ownership of old media necessitates ongoing and novel research into the way the media and sport interact. This session welcomes papers that consider the media and sport in relation to a range of themes including: advertising and marketing; representations of gender, race, and national identity; political economy and ideology; and new media.
Sport, Bodies & Identity
Brent McDonald
This session welcomes papers that engage with research into sport, the body and identity. The body is a central vehicle from which to engage with the sociological significance of sport. As such research may examine the representation of bodies, or utilize the body as a methodological tool. Identity may be considered both individual and collective and draw on local, national, and transnational contexts. In particular papers that consider the variously contradictory, transformative, and reproductive ways sport intersects with identity are encouraged.

Sport, Justice & Development
Cora Burnett
The role of sport for delivering in the field of international mainstream development, or as part of the Sport for Development and Peace (SDP) movement, is a contentious issue. Since the UN declaration in 2003 about using sport as a vehicle for delivering on Sustainable Development Goals, main stakeholders developed policies, structures and partnerships to become part of this social movement. Major tensions emerged between Global North and Global South partnerships linked to unequal power relations and the domination of neo-Colonial ideology. Delivering sport (for) development programmes with the focus on individual agency is mostly underpinned by a liberalist framework and fails to address discriminatory systems and structural constraints. Most practices adhere to a human justice framework, but the interrogation of policies and strategies from sport powerhouses such as the IOC and FIFA reveals a top-down, pre-determined development agenda with relatively little room for indigenous participation and practice. This session invites papers that address the complexity of stakeholder agency in this crowded policy space, and asks for reflections on unequal power relations and multiple practices that explore discriminatory practices and contextual inequalities. Papers on theoretical underpinnings and theories of change, policy frameworks and practices that could advance the body of knowledge are also welcome.

Sport, Spectacle & Mega-Events
John Horne
Sports mega-events and global sport culture are structurally and experientially central to capitalist (post-) modernity. This session seeks to both assess this statement and explore other questions, including: What are the economic, political and social risks and benefits of hosting sports mega-events? What implications, if any, can be drawn from analyses of recent and forthcoming spectacular sports mega-events in the East and Global South for a broader understanding of changing relations of economic and political power on a global scale? To what extent do mega-events intervene in systems of governance at the local, national and international levels? What do mega-events tell us about the significance or the effectiveness of various forms of popular resistance to global power networks? What do mega-events tell us about the role of communications media in the early twenty first century political economy of global culture?
Sport & Social Inequalities

Christine Dallaire

Sport can both reproduce and reinforce social inequalities and at the same time serve as a site of resistance and social change, albeit to unequal effects. This session invites papers that address either of these roles or the complex and complicated interaction of inclusion and exclusion through empirical and/or theoretical analysis of social relations in sport bounded by gender, sexuality, race and ethnicity, social class, nationality, age and so on. We encourage scholars to reflect on the relationship between sport and social inequalities by exploring inequalities of condition, opportunity and capability. Papers can, furthermore, focus on the effects of inequalities and resistance on sports participants and organizations or instead examine sport’s ambiguous impact on broader social change.

Contemporary Issues in Sociology of Sport

John Horne

This session invites scholars to explore new and emerging topics of research in the sociology of sport. Papers can also revisit or propose to update our sociological thinking about older questions and themes about sport through innovative theoretical analysis or new and creative empirical evidence. In short, what are current issues in sport and how can we enhance our understanding of these issues through sociological analysis?

Call for Abstracts: The 2018 Annual Conference:

International Sociology of Sport Association

June 5-8, Lausanne, Switzerland
Conference Theme: Sports Organizations and Organizing Sports: Critical Reflections

Submission Process:
- Authors are required to submit their abstract online at www.issa2018.org by December 1, 2017.
- Direct any questions to the Conference Program Committee to issa-congress@icsevents.com

From June 5 to 8, 2018, the International Sociology of Sport Association (ISSA) will hold its World Congress at the University of Lausanne, Switzerland. The conference theme is Sports Organizations and Organizing Sports: Critical Reflections.

Lausanne, the Olympic capital, is home to the headquarters of no less than 46 international sports federations, and therefore provides the opportunity to foster connections and debate between the scholarly community and the (inter)national sports community.

The aim of the main theme of this annual conference will be to tackle the links between the social sciences, especially sociology, and sports organizations.

We will address how the social sciences and sports organizations influence each other. This will be achieved by exploring two main aspects of this relationship. On the one hand, we aim to consider how research is integrated into sports organizations and what its influence is on factors such as gender, ageing, social class and power relations, violence, risk and globalization. This will involve key areas of interest, such as the contribution of the social sciences and their ability to transform sports organizations, its actors, policies, representations and values, as well as the role and added value of social scientists in sport organizations, as well as interrogating policy coherence within the sport sector as a cross-cutting theme. On the other hand, we will also examine how sports organizations impact the social sciences. For example, which theoretical and methodological issues are raised by the way sports organizations function, and how can the study of sports organizations help to further extend wider sociological knowledge?

Beyond this main theme, the congress will also feature a diverse range of sessions to enable scholars, including postgraduate students, the opportunity to share their latest research. The congress will provide networking opportunities in order to allow delegates to develop collaborative research projects and extend international scientific knowledge in the sociology of sport.

Abstracts are due December 1, 2017.
- Authors should submit their abstracts and communicate during the congress in English language sessions or in French language sessions. Please note that no translation services will be offered during the congress.
- Authors are required to submit their abstract online (abstracts sent by e-mail will not be accepted).
- Abstracts should not exceed 250 words (approximately 1750 characters including spaces).
- ISSA policy limits the number of papers an individual author can present: each participant can present one paper as the lead author. His or her name can appear on up to two additional papers as second or additional author, but not as the presenter.
- Authors should make themselves available for the duration of the Congress, June 5 – 8, 2018.

We encourage all presenters to prepare a power point presentation in order to facilitate comprehension since the ISSA Congress attracts an international audience.

Abstract submission is free of charge.

Registration fees must be paid by March 15, 2018 at the latest to secure the presentation during the congress and the publication of your name and abstract in the Book of Abstracts.
Poster presentations: Please use portrait style (A0 size)

2017 ISSA World Congress in Taoyuan City, Taiwan Highlights

ISSA 2017 Taoyuan Congress Highlights

The 2017 ISSA Congress was held at the National Taiwan Sport University (NTSU) in Taoyuan, Taiwan, from May 5 to June 2. It attracted 213 delegates from 27 countries, with more than half of all participants representing the following ten countries: Taiwan, Republic of Korea, Japan, UK, China, France, Canada, USA, Australia and Belgium.

Congratulations to our Taiwanese colleagues and hosts from the Taiwan Society of Sport Sociology (TSSS) and NTSU for putting on such a successful congress and inviting us to reflect on the theme of Reimagining Democracies and Sport. The delegates further appreciated the incredible hospitality offered by the hosts as many attendees also attended the complimentary Dragon Boat Festival Tour just prior to the opening of the Congress. Every attendee also received a complimentary pair of ISSA running shoes.
The above photo shows many of the attending delegates.

Dr. Christopher Gaffney from the University of Zurich delivered the keynote address: “Reimagining Democracies and Sport – For Whom Does the Pendulum Swing.”

- You can download his keynote address at: http://issa1965.org/conferences/historical-overview/

Many thanks to Dr. Gaffney for sharing his text with our members!
Many thanks to long-time ISSA member Dong-Jhy (Tony) Hwang along with Tzu-Hsuan (Sean) Chen and the rest of their team for their work since 2015 on planning and delivering an engaging scholarly program and enjoyable networking activities. Their attention to detail and most warm welcome made for a terrific academic and social experience.

Welcome words from the NTSU President

ISSA Graduate Student Paper Award Winner: Engela van der Klashorst, PhD student University of Johannesburg.

Congratulations to Engela van der Klashorst for her award winning paper, “Employment Through Sport: Ignoring the Socio-Economic Rights of Youth Leaders Working in Sport for Development Initiatives on Grass Root Level in South Africa.” Engela’s is the first ISSA graduate award winner from Africa. Her PhD work is supervised by Cora Burnett.

Special Thanks to ISSA 2017 Mentors

As an international organization and in the spirit of scholarship, ISSA supports learning and teaching. This is particularly significant given that our association and congress operate in English but our members are not all English-speakers. In this spirit the ISSA Board will like to thank those who served as mentors for the 2017 ISSA Conference. These mentors worked with and under the direction of ISSA Past President Elizabeth Pike to help review ISSA congress abstracts and ISSA congress power point presentations. In doing so each mentor helped to support ISSA’s international mission, in this case to provide assistance for scholars for whom English is not their first language. Please join us in thanking mentors Tamas Doczi (Hungary), Chris Hallinan (Australia), Steve Jackson (New Zealand), Parissa Safai (Canada), and Elizabeth Pike (UK).

Reminder About New SAGE Publishing Platform

Researchers, teachers, and students should be advised that the IRSS has migrated to a new SAGE journals publishing platform to improve access and ease of use. Users will now find all information concerning the IRSS as well as access to all IRSS content at http://journals.sagepub.com/home/irs.

As has been the case with the earlier IRSS publishing platform, those that have access to the IRSS through packages in their institutional libraries will be able to access articles published in the IRSS free of charge by entering this portal through their library’s institutional protocol. As always, we encourage faculty at institutions with library subscriptions to the IRSS to think about building the reading of articles published in the IRSS into course syllabi and reading lists.

New Editorial Team Transition for 2018

We are pleased to welcome the ISSA Executive Board appointment of Dominic Malcolm, University of Loughborough, UK, as the incoming Editor-in-Chief of the IRSS for a four-year term beginning in 2018. Malcolm will take over this important leadership role from Lawrence Wenner, Loyola Marymount University, USA, who will conclude his six-year tenure as Editor-in-Chief at the at the end of 2017’s Volume 52.
Malcolm brings a long history of engagement with the ISSA and a substantial record of diverse research on the sociology of sport to his editorship. Malcolm will be working with current editorial team during the latter part of 2017 to insure a smooth transition of editorial operations at the IRSS.

Call for Research Articles

The IRSS encourages the submission of diverse research articles seated in the sociology of sport, broadly defined, that shed light on social and cultural understandings of sport.
Interdisciplinary, inclusive, and global, the IRSS is the journal of the International Sociology of Sport Association and is published in partnership with SAGE Publications.
Please visit the journal website for more information about its Aims & Scope, the Editorial Board, manuscript submission guidelines, and sample issues at http://journals.sagepub.com/home/irs

The IRSS publishes eight issues each year and has expanded to 1024 annual pages. To help expedite the review and publication process, the IRSS uses the SAGE Track online manuscript submission site powered by ScholarOne Manuscripts. Scholars submitting manuscripts for consideration can expect a prompt double-blind review process that draws on the expertise of a diverse editorial board and a worldwide network over 2000 expert area scholars. When combined with the SAGE OnlineFirst publication program that makes accepted manuscripts available to scholars within weeks of acceptance, the IRSS has the ability to get scholarly work promptly disseminated to international audiences.

Under the guidance of Editor-in-Chief Lawrence Wenner, the IRSS has seven distinguished Corresponding Editors from across the globe available for consultation and a 40-member international Editorial Board. Articles considered by the IRSS include standard-length research articles as well as shorter research articles. The IRSS aims to be an open and attractive place for the prompt publication of research aimed at the international community. The IRSS editorial team looks forward to having the opportunity to consider your work. Manuscripts may be submitted at http://mc.manuscriptcentral.com/irss .

Call for Book and Media Reviews

In addition to research articles, the IRSS encourages reviews of individual books and media works and considers integrative review essays of multiple works. Authors wishing to review books or media (films, videos, interactive media) for the IRSS should review the guidelines for book and media reviews at http://journals.sagepub.com/home/irs Review authors may refer to previous issues of IRSS for format guidance. Reviews may be submitted at http://mc.manuscriptcentral.com/irss Authors of reviews should free to contact the book and media reviews editor directly: Dr. David Leonard, Washington State University, Comparative Ethnic Studies, PO Box 644010, Pullman, WA 99164-4010. CALL FOR PAPERS

CFP: Women, Sports and Media: Careers, Coverage, and Consequences

Please submit a research abstract for a conference Women, Sports and Media to be held at the University of Maryland, College Park, April 20-21, 2018.

We seek research on three key themes: women sports journalists; audiences for women’s sports; and coverage of women athletes. We are particularly interested in work that addresses intersections with race/ethnicity and sexuality, and that identifies possible implications, impacts and potential solutions to problems. Among other topics, the following are relevant:

The treatment of women in sports media. What challenges do women face in getting various media jobs? What (or who) accounts for these problems? Does the lack of women leaders or workplace hostility impact women’s sports media careers? How can university journalism programs help women become more competitive for jobs? What is the role of physical appearance for sports journalists (and women athletes)?

Audience support for women’s sports and women sports journalists. Do women have distinctive interests; if so, are they being addressed? Should more or different content be created for girls and women? Does the coverage of and for women affect women’s athletics at the high school, college, and professional levels, as well as internationally and at the Olympics? Are boys and men showing greater interest in women’s sports?

The impact of pushback. Do hosts or callers at radio talk shows trade in code words, sexist language and/or anti-women topics? Do sports visual manifest sexism? Can or should athletes or sports journalists comment on sexism or gender politics?

Authors can submit extended abstracts (2-3 pages) or full papers. For purposes of refereeing, please anonymize the abstract or paper and also submit a separate title page with all authors’ contact information, and indicating the corresponding author. Research papers may be included in a potential book. Please contact Dr. Linda Steiner, professor in the Philip Merrill College of Journalism with questions, at lsteiner@umd.edu, or 301-405-2426.

Submissions should be sent to Womensports@umd.edu by January 30, 2018. Authors will be emailed feedback and a decision by the end of February 2018, so that you can make plans to attend the conference.

Keynotes will be presented April 20 and April 21 by:

- Claire Smith: first woman Major League Baseball beat writer, winner of the J. G. Taylor Spink Award, and first woman voted into the sportswriters’ wing of the Baseball Hall of Fame.
- Cheryl Cooky: Past-President, North American Society for the Sociology of Sport; Associate Professor, Purdue; co-author of No Slam Dunk: Gender, Sport, and the Unevenness of Social Change.

The 2017 Annual Conference

North American Society for the Sociology of Sport

November 1 – 4, Windsor, Ontario

Conference Theme:
Sport Matters: Physics, Politics, Performances, Pedagogies

While exigencies and politics may have changed, in the 37 years that the members of the North American Society for the Sociology of Sport (NASSS) have convened their annual meetings, two things have remained constant: sport is both matter and sport matters. In this year's meeting, many participants will explore the double meaning of “matter(s)” in the context of contemporary sport and physical culture. That is, scholars will explore how physical and material bodies in/of motion (and at play) both constitute, and are constituted by, broader political, economic, and cultural arrangements. At an historical moment defined in North America (and beyond) by growing degrees of xenophobia, ethnic nationalism, global neoliberalism, heteronormative patriarchy, ableist doxa, environmental collapse, and anti-science politics, we believe that bodies performing therein serve as critical ‘matters of concern’ for understanding our present condition.

In keeping with the conference theme, several sessions will highlight various ways in which scholars are exploring the double meaning of sport-related matter (as both consequential and substantial) and the alliterative intersections that make it so (e.g. politics-physics, politics-performances, politics-pedagogies, physics-performances, physics-pedagogies, performances-pedagogies). This year’s event, includes scholars doing theoretical, empirical, and interventionist work on sporting and physically active bodies and body cultures bringing together scholarship and activism that seeks to make sense of and provide resistance to the uneven politics working against bodies in motion and at play. The conference will also feature presentations from a wide variety of approaches, including but not limited to: activism, sport for peace and development, social work, critical coaching, critical pedagogy, policy and governance, engagement with the media, self-authored media (e.g. blogging, podcasts), and others. The full range of theoretical and methodological will also be represented, including: poststructuralism, postmodernism, new materialism, participatory action research, ethnography, discourse analysis, post-positivism, critical management studies, media studies, and of course sociological theory and methods.

2017 ANZALS Conference: Leisure for Social Change
University of Tasmania-Sandy Bay campus, Hobart, Tasmania Australia
4-7 December, 2017

The 2017 ANZALS conference to be held in Hobart, on Australia’s scenic southern island, from 4-7 December 2017. The event will be hosted by the University of Tasmania through a collaboration between the Institute for Regional Development, the Tasmanian School of Business and Economics, the Faculty of Health and the Tourism Research and Education Network (TRENd).
ANZALS 13th Biennial Conference:
Having mounted a case for leisure as a human right at the 12th Biennial ANZALS Conference in Adelaide 2015, we now explore leisure as an agent for social change. The 13th Biennial ANZALS Conference calls on all to review leisure as a social change agent at individual, community and societal levels in a rapidly changing world. This event will seek to build on the long tradition of ANZALS conferences by asking presenters and attendees to reflect on and discuss both the positive and negative roles leisure plays across a number of significant global, regional and local issues. The conference will provide an avenue for the dissemination of leisure studies research that cuts across a variety of domains such as business, health, the environment, tourism, events, education and disability as well as transport, planning, policy, place management and infrastructure.

Special Journal Issues, Call for Papers

CALL FOR PAPERS
Special Issue of the Journal of Global Sport Management: “Sports Integrity: Ethics, Policy and Practice” - http://explore.tandfonline.com/cfp/bes/jgsm/sp-iss4

Submission Deadline: October 30, 2017

Manuscripts are currently being solicited for an upcoming special issue of the Journal of Global Sport Management dedicated to Sports Integrity: Ethics, Policy and Practice.

Integrity in the playing and management of sport is becoming one of the critical issues of our time. Barely a day goes by without a news story about some form of challenge to the integrity of sport, for example: the large scale financial corruption scandals that have engulfed FIFA and other governing bodies; allegations of industrial scale doping in Russian athletics; concerns about match-manipulation in football, tennis and other major sports; racial and other forms of discrimination that haunt many sports; violence, on and off the field; human rights abuses of workers who help stage sporting events. These are a few of the areas in which significant ethical issues arise and which demand the development of policy based on sound ethical judgements, and the ability of sports managers to put policy into practice. At the professional level, sports integrity underpins the commercial, social and cultural value of sports. Fans will only be prepared to buy into the drama of sport if they are assured that the contest is of the highest integrity and is a product they can trust. Actions that undermine the integrity of sport run the risk of undermining the business of sport and putting the jobs and economic value of a whole sector in jeopardy. Further, sport is often said to hold a particular place in culture and society with life-long and generational attachments often made to clubs and sports. Threats to the integrity of sport threaten to loosen these socio-cultural ties. Non-professional sport raises issues of integrity of its own, for example: the protection of children and young people; the role of volunteers; inclusion and exclusion in amateur and community sports; exposure to injuries in school sports; access to sports resources for people from disadvantaged backgrounds.

Indicative areas of interest include, but are not restricted to:
- Sport and ethics – fairness and justice
- Governance and the regulation of sport in regards to anti-corruption
- Ethics and the financial management of sport
- Agents and third-party ownership
- Match-fixing and strategies to combat manipulation
- Gambling, betting and online/mobile technology
- Sports medicine, doping and drugs education
• New technology, the body and gene therapy
• Violence, head injuries and youth sport
• Diversity and inclusion
• Equity and anti-discrimination
• Sport, politics and human rights
• Employment rights of athletes
• Stadium and hosting security

Papers of a maximum of 6000 words excluding bibliography should identify the critical ethical issues that arise in the topic under discussion and explore how policy and/or practice might be derived from sound ethical judgements. Papers that are co-written by academics and sports practitioners are especially welcome, but it is not a requirement. Submissions should be made via the journal’s online submission system, ScholarOne; authors should indicate in their cover letter that the submission is to be considered for the Special Issue on Sports Integrity: Ethics, Policy and Practice. Any questions or to submit abstracts for feedback – please contact the guest editor.

Call for Papers

There is increasing global interest among mainstream sociologists (and other social scientists) in the widening income and wealth inequalities, and related social and health inequalities, which characterize many societies across the world. Interest in the significance of social inequalities related to divisions such as class, gender, age, race and ethnicity, place and location, sexuality, ability, religion, identity, and the intersections between these, is of course not new. Sociologists have long been interested in how they are experienced, how they shape life chances, and how they help make sense of social relationships. However, the scale and pace of growth in various forms of inequality in the last decade or so has rekindled interest in the corrosive effects of inequality on individuals, communities, and whole societies not only among academics, but also policy-makers, politicians, world leaders, the media, and those whose lives continue to be effected by them.

The politics of equality and inequality is also of interest among sociologists of sport, since it is well-established that sports are social phenomena that reflect, reveal, reproduce, and reinforce social inequalities, ideologies, and social exclusion. Sports are also potential sites of resistance to social inequality, of producing social change, of improving life chances, and of fostering social relationships which provide the basis for a more humane social world.

The papers in this Research Topic will bring together bodies of knowledge in sociology, sport, politics, social epidemiology, and policy analysis to examine the production and reproduction of social inequalities, and of the potential challenges to them, in and through the various relationships and processes which constitute sport. In particular, the papers will examine:

Theoretical, empirical, and methodological analyses of inequality in sport and the wider society.
Inequalities in contemporary social relations which exist in sport (e.g., gender, social class, sexuality, age and generations, ability, race and ethnicity, religion, place and location, identity, and status).
Sport as both a cause of, and solution for, social inequalities and other social problems.
Sports-based programmes as sites for promoting and compromising health and wellbeing, quality of social relationships, social capital, and trust.
The limitations and possibilities of using sport-plus and plus-sport programmes to address social inequalities.
The social, psychological, political, and economic costs of inequality and their consequences for sport.
Political and policy responses to sport, social inequalities, and inequities.

Leisure Studies Call for Papers
Leisure Cultures and Glocal Challenges to National Populist Politics

Guest co-editors: Stanley Thangaraj, Daniel Burdsey, Aarti Ratna, and Erica Rand

Contemporary politics – in their cultural, governmental, spatial, neoliberal and/or institutional forms – are saturated by racialised forms of power, exclusion and entitlement. The recent rise in conservative politics among the major Western powers has given (renewed) rise to a consolidation and expansion of white supremacism and anti-immigrant ideologies, regimes and discourses across Europe and in the United States of America: Brexit in the UK, the election of Donald Trump in the United States, the so-called “refugee crisis” in Europe and the rise of what Stuart Hall termed “authoritarian populism” broadly. Meanwhile, within locations across the Global South, such as India and Syria, religious and ethnic insularity and discrimination have facilitated a pernicious politics of division highlighted by various forms of authoritarianism. These developments and conditions build on the collisions between entrenched neoliberalism, endemic Islamophobia, pernicious attacks on multiculturalism, and personal, symbolic and structural forms of racial violence.

This special issue examines how these matters occur in, through and are challenged by leisure, physical culture and sport. Specifically, this special issue interrogates both how institutional and informal realms of leisure-based protest, resistance, and counter-hegemonic struggle continue to operate in recognizable ways; and how emergent leisure-based cultures, practices, contexts and tactics are being developed that offer a rupture to normative regimes, discourses and practices. Alongside a consideration of more established models and sites of protest, this special issue attends to nuanced, under-the-radar forms of leisure and sport that also come with new forms of resistance, solidarity, conviviality, pleasure and desire. These forms of protest provide understandings of the larger social world, alerting us to how hegemonic and counter-hegemonic forms of governance are embodied and managed during these uncertain political and economic times.

By underscoring race – and interpolating it within a conversation with broader neoliberal forces – this special issue aims to highlight the ways in which leisure cultures, practices and spaces incorporate various axes, categories and mediums to invigorate and substantiate racial classifications, including those that work outside the western lexicon of race and intelligibility. The collection will explore how race gains traction through the interjection of class, gender, sexuality, ability, citizenship and multiple politics of location. At a time when key global actors institute “alternative facts” as a way to further institute racism, classism, homophobia, patriarchy and sexism, ableism, and other forms of oppression, this special issue aims to highlight what critical understandings of leisure can do to challenge anti-intellectual, imperial pursuits. Moreover, this special issue also encourages essays that consider not only leisure, sport and physical culture as substantive foci, but also interrogate dominant practices of studying and writing about them, both inside and outside the academy.

Contributions might explore (but are not limited to) the following questions:

- What are the relationships between national populism, leisure, and race? How have these three categories been connected and reaffirmed, historically and in the present day?
- Which new practices, cultures and spaces of leisure are produced by/within the contemporary authoritarian epoch?
- How are these practices, cultures and spaces of leisure represented and reported within dominant and progressive forms of media?
- What and where are the local, global and transnational forms of leisure resistance (especially between Global North and South)?
- How can we understand indigeneity, settler colonialism, and national populism through the category of leisure?
- How can we understand leisure in relation to the “global war on terror” and its connections to national populism?
- In which ways do gender and sexuality become key to the racial logics governing leisure, national populism, local resistance, and the production of race?
- How can we understand rape culture in leisure culture as we make sense of the rise of national populism, ethnic strife, and white supremacy?
- How can we decolonize and deconstruct theoretically the relationship between national populism and the pernicious politics of division (within and/or across the Global North and South)?
- How does pleasure take shape in/through leisure during moments of authoritarian, genocidal governance?
- How do old/new forms of leisure trouble and/or reinforce the identities and borderlands of race, gender, sexuality, ability, and nation?
- What does a socially and politically just research methodology and practice look like in this field?
