2020 World Congress of Sociology of Sport in partnership with the Latin American Association of Sociocultural Studies of Sport (ALESDE) and the Latin American Council of Social Sciences (CLACSO)

Call for Papers

Universidad Andres Bello, Viña del Mar, Chile

Local and Global Challenges for Social Studies of Sport in the 21st Century

From October 14 -17, 2020, the International Sociology of Sport Association (ISSA) in partnership with the Latin American Association of Sociocultural Studies of Sport (ALESDE) and the Latin American Council of Social Sciences (CLACSO) will hold its World Congress at Universidad Andres Bello in Viña del Mar, Chile. This congress will provide a forum to develop ideas and also represents an invitation and a challenge to participants with an aim to create an opportunity for the growth and mutual recognition of our advances and perspectives in the social studies of sports.

The theme of this congress is driven by several questions relating to the local and global production of knowledge in the sociology of sport, namely:

- What impact does our work have on a process of scientific circulation on a world scale?
- What are the characteristics in our production of knowledge?
- What can a Latin American country offer?

What are our characteristics in the production of knowledge? The work of Eisenstadt (2012) posits the idea of "multiple modernities" which understands that, while the world is approaching modernity, the dichotomy between traditional and modern societies loses relevance. However, encounters between cultures and projects of modernity give way to these multiple modernities, understanding that the process did not turn out to be a path defined by the European trajectory of modernity.

In the same way that Latin American "modernity" does not turn out to be a spelling of European "modernity", the production of knowledge isn't either. Latin America was marked by a developmental period, in which an academic circuit was consolidated in the region and post-graduate schools were created, which facilitated circulation within the region, producing academic autonomy (Beigel, 2013). However, these processes decreased after the waves of dictatorships in the different Latin American countries. Although this could represent a setback, it also positioned our continent with a "critical" experience and sensitivity regarding the creation of knowledge from the social sciences.

C. Wright Mills (1959) argues about the transformation of sociology and speaks of an increasing specialization and the loss of the "craftsmanship" that the classical social researcher had. In his perspective he mentions them as deformations produced by the tendencies of industrial societies. In these differences he mentions that social researchers in industrial societies have a marked "methodological formalism", while Latin America has a lack of rigor, but there is a capacity for "essayism". From this old criticism, removing the negative character that Mills gives, we can see two distinctive features: the narrative offered by Latin America and the formalism that can be provided from other regions.

Returning to the question about the characteristics of the Latin American reality, for our part it is not possible to refer to ourselves as experts on the progress of the sociology of sport outside of our region. In the continent, sociology of sports could be summarized through the quote from Alabarces (2016) "Hemos fundado una sociología del deporte casi sin sociólogos" (We have founded a sports sociology almost without sociologists). This situation, has been an opportunity to develop interdisciplinary research from anthropologists, historians, philosophers, sociologists, physical education teachers, psychologists and so on.

In relation to the critical observation and questions, what can a Latin American country offer? The theme is an opportunity to discuss our epistemological differences, as well to share our methodological tools from which we create our (grounded) knowledge. There is a low Latin American presence in ISSA, which can be caused by our monetary exchange differences in global economy, making difficult a Latin American participation in spaces outside the region. In this way ALESDE and CLACSO are nourished by knowledge that is generated and circulates through a cohesive but narrow network within the region, but with difficulties for rapid exchange with the rest of the world.

All this knowledge pushes the idea of the title, "Local and Global Challenges for Social Studies Of Sport in the 21st Century", as a challenge and invitation. Recognizing that countries and regions have travelled different trajectories and have overcome different challenges in the production of knowledge in the social studies of sports, which deserve a space for discussion and sharing in order to cross paths that allow scientific enrichment. Beyond the main theme, the congress will also feature a diverse range of sessions to enable scholars, including postgraduate students, the opportunity to share their latest research.

Abstract submissions will begin in February. Please visit: www.issa2020.com

International Review for the Sociology of Sport Editor Dominic Malcolm

Call for Research Articles

International Review for the Sociology of Sport
Editor-in-Chief Dominic Malcolm

Call for Research Articles

The IRSS encourages the submission of diverse research articles seated in the sociology of sport, broadly defined, that shed light on social and cultural understandings of sport. Interdisciplinary, inclusive, and global, the IRSS is the journal of the International Sociology of Sport Association and is published in partnership with SAGE Publications. Please visit the journal website for more information about its Aims & Scope, the Editorial Board, manuscript submission guidelines, and sample issues at <http://journals.sagepub.com/home/irs>

The IRSS publishes eight issues each year. To help expedite the review and publication process, the IRSS uses the SAGE Track online manuscript submission site powered by ScholarOne Manuscripts. Scholars submitting manuscripts for consideration can expect a prompt double-blind review process that draws on the expertise of a diverse editorial board and a worldwide network over 3000 expert area scholars. While we expect in the region of 300 submissions per year (including revised manuscripts) we operate a highly efficient process such that the majority of decisions on manuscripts are issued within 40 days of submission. The journal's use of the SAGE OnlineFirst publication program means that accepted manuscripts are usually made available to the scholarly community within weeks of acceptance. New Content alerts and exposure on the Sage Sociology Twitter channel (with around 34,000 followers) means that publication in the IRSS provides authors with an excellent opportunity to get scholarly work promptly disseminated to international audiences.

Book/Media Reviews

Authors wishing to review books or media (films, videos, interactive media) for the IRSS should review the guidelines for book and media reviews at <http://journals.sagepub.com/home/irs> and refer to previous issues of IRSS for format guidance.

To discuss potential media and/or comparative reviews, or to volunteer to contribute to a comparative review, please contact the book and media reviews editor directly: Dr. Kass Gibson, Plymouth Marjon University, Email: kgibson@marjon.ac.uk

Manuscripts for both research articles and book/media reviews may be submitted at <http://mc.manuscriptcentral.com/irss> The IRSS editorial team looks forward to having the opportunity to consider your work.

Becoming a Reviewer

Being a reviewer gives you an insight into the publication process and a better understanding of how to develop your own research and publications. The easiest way to become a reviewer is to create an account through <http://mc.manuscriptcentral.com/irss>

Here you will be asked to provide some keywords that describe your expertise and interests. Think carefully about how these might be used, as often reviewers are sourced through a keyword search of this database. Feel free to update these keywords as often as you like.

Managing your Account

If you already registered an account for the IRSS do remember to keep it updated. For instance, please remember to change your contact details when you move between institutions. Also consider updating your expertise keywords as your research profile develops. This will ensure that the journal gets reviewers who are active in their respective fields, and that you don't get review requests that are no longer appropriate to your interests.

Members' News

ISSA is happy to share information about conferences, seminars, awards, jobs etc. We will gladly include your news in our eBulletin and the ISSA website. ISSA is always looking for ways to improve communication and serve our members. We encourage you to submit comments and suggestions.

Please send any feedback and information to Emmanuelle Tulle at: communications@issa1965.org and remember that ISSA also has its own Facebook page, and you are welcome to share information via this group.
