Call for Abstracts Extended
The International Sociology of Sport Association
2018 Annual Conference

June 5-8, Lausanne, Switzerland
Conference Theme:
Sports Organizations and Organizing Sports: Critical Reflections

We have received 260 abstracts. Yet, there is still time to submit your abstract. The abstract submission system will be open until we have reached a maximum of 320 abstracts or until January 12, 2018 (whichever comes first). Please send your abstract soon!

Submission Process:
• Authors are required to submit their abstract online at www.issa2018.org
• Direct any questions to the Conference Program Committee to issa-congress@icsevents.com

From June 5 to 8, 2018, the International Sociology of Sport Association (ISSA) will hold its World Congress at the University of Lausanne, Switzerland. The conference theme is Sports Organizations and Organizing Sports: Critical Reflections

Lausanne, the Olympic capital, is home to the headquarters of no less than 46 international sports federations, and therefore provides the opportunity to foster connections and debate between the scholarly community and the (inter)national sports community.

The aim of the main theme of this annual conference will be to tackle the links between the social sciences, especially sociology, and sports organizations.

We will address how the social sciences and sports organizations influence each other. This will be achieved by exploring two main aspects of this relationship. On the one hand, we aim to consider how research is integrated into sports organizations and what its influence is on factors such as gender, ageing, social class and power relations, violence, risk and globalization. This will involve key areas of interest, such as the contribution of the social sciences and their ability to transform sports organizations, its actors, policies, representations and values, as well as the role and added value of social scientists in sport organizations, as well as interrogating policy coherence within the sport sector as a cross-cutting theme. On the other hand, we will also examine how sports organizations impact the social sciences. For example, which theoretical and methodological issues are raised by the way sports organizations function, and how can the study of sports organizations help to further extend wider sociological knowledge? Beyond this main theme, the congress will also feature a diverse range of sessions to enable scholars, including postgraduate students, the opportunity to share their latest research. The congress will provide networking opportunities in order to allow delegates to develop collaborative research projects and extend international scientific knowledge in the sociology of sport.

Abstracts are due January 12, 2018 or when we received 320 abstracts.
- Authors should submit their abstracts and communicate during the congress in English language sessions or in French language sessions. Please note that no translation services will be offered during the congress.
- Authors are required to submit their abstract online (abstracts sent by e-mail will not be accepted).
- Abstracts should not exceed 250 words (approximately 1750 characters including spaces).
- ISSA policy limits the number of papers an individual author can present: each participant can present one paper as the lead author. His or her name can appear on up to two additional papers as second or additional author, but not as the presenter.
- Authors should make themselves available for the duration of the Congress, June 5 – 8, 2018.

We encourage all presenters to prepare a power point presentation in order to facilitate comprehension since the ISSA Congress attracts an international audience.

Abstract submission is free of charge.

Registration fees must be paid by March 31, 2018 at the latest to secure the presentation during the congress and the publication of your name and abstract in the Book of Abstracts.

Poster presentations: Please use portrait style (A0 size)

CFP: Women, Sports and Media: Careers, Coverage, and Consequences

Please submit a research abstract for a conference Women, Sports and Media to be held at the University of Maryland, College Park, April 20-21, 2018.

We seek research on three key themes: women sports journalists; audiences for women’s sports; and coverage of women athletes. We are particularly interested in work that addresses intersections with race/ethnicity and sexuality, and that identifies possible implications, impacts and potential solutions to problems. Among other topics, the following are relevant:

The treatment of women in sports media. What challenges do women face in getting various media jobs? What (or who) accounts for these problems? Does the lack of women leaders or workplace hostility impact women’s sports media careers? How can university journalism programs help women become more competitive for jobs? What is the role of physical appearance for sports journalists (and women athletes)?

Audience support for women’s sports and women sports journalists. Do women have distinctive interests; if so, are they being addressed? Should more or different content be created for girls and women? Does the coverage of and for women affect women’s athletics at the high school, college, and professional levels, as well as internationally and at the Olympics? Are boys and men showing greater interest in women’s sports?

The impact of pushback. Do hosts or callers at radio talk shows trade in code words, sexist language and/or anti-women topics? Do sports visual manifest sexism? Can or should athletes or sports journalists comment on sexism or gender politics?

Authors can submit extended abstracts (2-3 pages) or full papers. For purposes of refereeing, please anonymize the abstract or paper and also submit a separate title page with all authors’ contact information, and indicating the corresponding author. Research papers may be included in a potential book. Please contact Dr. Linda Steiner, professor in the Philip Merrill College of Journalism with questions, at lsteiner@umd.edu, or 301-405-2426.

Submissions should be sent to Womensports@umd.edu by January 30, 2018. Authors will be emailed feedback and a decision by the end of February 2018, so that you can make plans to attend the conference.
Keynotes will be presented April 20 and April 21 by:

• Claire Smith: first woman Major League Baseball beat writer, winner of the J. G. Taylor Spink Award, and first woman voted into the sportswriters’ wing of the Baseball Hall of Fame.

• Cheryl Cooky: Past-President, North American Society for the Sociology of Sport; Associate Professor, Purdue; co-author of No Slam Dunk: Gender, Sport, and the Unevenness of Social Change.

Call for Papers

We are pleased to announce the call for papers for the 46th Annual Conference of the North American Society for Sport History hosted by the University of Manitoba, May 25-28, 2018. As customary, individuals interested in participating in the conference are invited to submit proposals either for individual papers, thematic sessions, or panel presentations. What is different from years past, however, is that proposals now are required to be sent through the NASSH online abstract submission page designed by Andy Linden and the IT Committee. This new procedure should make it easier for individuals to submit their proposals and streamline the entire process regarding the evaluation and editing of manuscripts. The deadline established for submission of manuscripts is Friday, January 5, with individuals being informed by the Program Committee of the acceptance or rejection of their proposals at the beginning of February. One other difference is that abstracts will be posted online prior to the conference. Authors will have an opportunity to edit for errors/typos prior to the publication.

In addition to the call for papers, the NASSH website
(https://www.nassh.org/annual-convention/) provides full details on conference registration, transportation, accommodations, venues and special needs, and options regarding dining and entertainment. Registration is being managed by a system operated by the Faculty of Kinesiology and Recreation Management at the University of Manitoba with all sessions and events taking place at the historic Fort Garry Hotel, except for the annual NASSH closing-night banquet which will be held at the Canadian Museum for Human Rights.

The University of Manitoba will also be hosting the NASSH pre-conference workshop, “Indigenous Resurgence, Regeneration, and Decolonization through Sport History,” on May 23-24. Full details are also available on the NASSH website (https://www.nassh.org/pre-conference-workshop/).

It is our hope that as many people as possible will join us in Winnipeg for a conference that will be intellectually stimulating and provide opportunities for those from various backgrounds and with different interests as well as diverse perspectives to dialogue and learn more about the history of sport. Interspersed with all that, we trust, will also be the friendly association and sense of camaraderie that has always characterized NASSH conferences.

Leisure Studies Call for Papers
Leisure Cultures and Glocal Challenges to National Populist Politics

Guest co-editors: Stanley Thangaraj, Daniel Burdsey, Aarti Ratna, and Erica Rand

Contemporary politics – in their cultural, governmental, spatial, neoliberal and/or institutional forms – are saturated by racialised forms of power, exclusion and entitlement. The recent rise in conservative politics among the major Western powers has given (renewed) rise to a consolidation and expansion of white supremacist and anti-immigrant ideologies, regimes and discourses across Europe and in the United States of America: Brexit in the UK, the election of Donald Trump in the United States, the so-called “refugee crisis” in Europe and the rise of what Stuart Hall termed “authoritarian populism” broadly. Meanwhile, within locations across the Global South, such as India and Syria, religious and ethnic insularity and discrimination have facilitated a pernicious politics of division highlighted by various forms of authoritarianism. These developments and conditions build on the collisions between entrenched neoliberalism, endemic Islamophobia, pernicious attacks on multiculturalism, and personal, symbolic and structural forms of racial violence.

This special issue examines how these matters occur in, through and are challenged by leisure, physical culture and sport. Specifically, this special issue interrogates both how institutional and informal realms of leisure-based protest, resistance, and counter-hegemonic struggle continue to operate in recognizable ways; and how emergent leisure-based cultures, practices, contexts and tactics are being developed that offer a rupture to normative regimes, discourses and practices. Alongside a consideration of more established models and sites of protest, this special issue attends to nuanced, under-the-radar forms of leisure and sport that also come with new forms of resistance, solidarity, conviviality, pleasure and desire. These forms of protest provide understandings of the larger social world, alerting us to how hegemonic and counter-hegemonic forms of governance are embodied and managed during these uncertain political and economic times.

By underscoring race – and interpolating it within a conversation with broader neoliberal forces – this special issue aims to highlight the ways in which leisure cultures, practices and spaces incorporate various axes, categories and mediums to invigorate and substantiate racial classifications, including those that work outside the western lexicon of race and intelligibility. The collection will explore how race gains traction through the interjection of class, gender, sexuality, ability, citizenship and multiple politics of location. At a time when key global actors institute “alternative facts” as a way to further institute racism, classism, homophobia, patriarchy and sexism, ableism, and other forms of oppression, this special issue aims to highlight what critical understandings of leisure can do to challenge anti-intellectual, imperial pursuits. Moreover, this special issue also encourages essays that consider not only leisure, sport and physical culture as substantive foci, but also interrogate dominant practices of studying and writing about them, both inside and outside the academy.

Contributions might explore (but are not limited to) the following questions:

- What are the relationships between national populism, leisure, and race? How have these three categories been connected and reaffirmed, historically and in the present day?
- Which new practices, cultures and spaces of leisure are produced by/within the contemporary authoritarian epoch?
- How are these practices, cultures and spaces of leisure represented and reported within dominant and progressive forms of media?
- What and where are the local, global and transnational forms of leisure resistance (especially between Global North and South)?
- How can we understand indigeneity, settler colonialism, and national populism through the category of leisure?
- How can we understand leisure in relation to the “global war on terror” and its connections to national populism?
- In which ways do gender and sexuality become key to the racial logics governing leisure, national populism, local resistance, and the production of race?
- How are we to understand rape culture in leisure culture as we make sense of the rise of national populism, ethnic strife, and white supremacy?
- How can we decolonize and deconstruct theoretically the relationship between national populism and the pernicious politics of division (within and/or across the Global North and South)?
- How does pleasure take shape in/through leisure during moments of authoritarian, genocidal governance?
- How do old/new forms of leisure trouble and/or reinforce the identities and borderlands of race, gender, sexuality, ability, and nation?
- What does a socially and politically just research methodology and practice look like in this field?

Research in the Sociology of Sport

Edited by Kevin Young, University of Calgary, Canada

About the series
Research in the Sociology of Sport (RSS) reflects the current themes in the sociology of sport and also captures innovative trends as they emerge in the work of scholars across the globe. The series brings together research from experts on established topics whilst also directing attention to themes that are at the 'cutting-edge' of this sub-discipline.

This exciting series examines the relationships between sport, culture and society. The function, meaning and significance of sport in contemporary societies are critically appraised. Attention is given to both small-scale micro levels of interaction in sport subcultures and also to how these sport subcultures exist within the macro processes reflected in the historical and structural features of societies.

Celebrating 10 volumes! 2017 sees the publication of the tenth volume in this series. We're celebrating with free chapters from all 10 volumes, and a special 30% discount across the series (use web code SPORT).
